To achieve the level one certification, county board members completed 30 credit hours of educational workshops and training sessions over two years. Board members can upgrade their certification every two years, supporting a continuous path of career-long learning.

"One of NACO's priorities is providing educational opportunities for county officials across the state," said Jon Cannon, NACO Executive Director. "We have found that the more education our county officials are exposed to, the more ably they can serve their communities."
